Lesson Background and Introduction

Jesus and the people of His time and place did not have corn as we have it today. But they had other plants that grew rapidly in the fertile and well-watered fields of the Galilee region. Jesus told many parables involving farming and sowing seeds. This lesson reveals one reason why. Jesus is known for his use of parables when teaching. While Jesus' parables are unique, this teaching method was well-known in the ancient world. For Jesus, a parable is usually an illustration that compares something well-known in the experience of the hearers to less understood spiritual truths. His illustrations were drawn from the everyday lives of his audience. Many parables teach about the "kingdom of God" (in Matthew, "kingdom of heaven"). We see their comparative nature in their introduction, "The kingdom of heaven is like ..." (example: Matthew 13:24). Some parables are narratives, telling a little story (example: Luke 15:4-7). Others are observational, giving spiritual application to an easily pictured scenario (example: 6:39). The kingdom parables often have applications regarding Jesus' intentions for the church. This lesson looks at two such parables in Mark.

The parables Jesus told give the impression of rapid growth of the kingdom of God. As with seeds to mature plants, this may seem mysterious to us at times. Astounding church growth may be happening in places we don't expect. May we rejoice whenever we hear stories of unbelievers coming to faith in Christ! But the numerical growth of people brings growth in the number of opinions and interpretations. This can lead to divisions (compare 1 Corinthians 1:10-17; 3:1-9; 11:17-22). The solution is found in the "seven ones" of Ephesians 4:4-6. These still define the basis for church unity.
